ISSUE STATEMENT:

Born in Yuma, Arizona on March 31, 1927, Cesar Chavez was a Mexican-American labor and civil rights leader who fought to improve the working and living conditions of farm workers. After losing their homestead through fraud and foreclosure, his family moved to California as migrant farm workers in the late 1930s during the Great Depression. Chavez experienced the unfair labor practices and abuses that were commonly endured by farmworkers, such as exposure to dangerous pesticides, low wages, lack of access to clean water or restrooms, and terrible housing conditions.

In 1942, Chavez finished 8th grade and began working full time as a migrant farm worker to help his family because his father had been injured and was no longer able to work. Chavez joined the U.S. Navy at age 19 and served in a segregated unit for two years. When he returned, he married Helen Fabela, and they eventually had eight children. In 1952 Chavez began working for the Community Service Organization (CSO), a Latino civil rights group, as a grassroots organizer and became a national director registering new voters and fighting for racial and economic justice.

In the 1940s through the 1960s the exploitative “bracero program” brought thousands of Mexicans to the U.S. to fill World War II labor shortages, undercut domestic wages, and break strikes. Workers attempting to organize into unions faced discrimination and were violently suppressed. Influenced by the nonviolent civil disobedience of Gandhi and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Chavez used his life savings and co-founded the National Farm Workers Association (NFWA) in 1962 with Dolores Huerta, who had also worked at CSO.

In 1965, NFWA and Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee (AWOC), a Filipino-American labor group, led what became a five-year strike against California grape growers. In 1966, Chavez led a 340-mile march from Delano to Sacramento and in 1968 went on a 25-day hunger strike. With national support, the strike led to a nationwide boycott of California grapes which ended in 1970 with successful negotiations with farmers, and recognition of the importance and rights for all farm workers.

NWFA and AWOC merged and eventually became the United Farm Workers of America (UFW). Chavez continued to lead efforts to support farm workers' right to unionize and negotiate for better wages and working conditions. In 1993, Chavez died in his sleep near Yuma, Arizona and was honored by more than 50,000 mourners from Florida to California who came to show their respect. In recognition of Chavez's impact, President Barack Obama borrowed "Si, se puede" or "Yes, we can" as part of his presidential campaign in 2008.

Cesar Chavez saw the need for change and made a courageous choice to work to improve the lives of his fellow farm workers. All residents are encouraged to observe this day to recognize the contributions of farm workers, importance of labor rights for all, and take action to honor Cesar Chavez's enduring legacy.
