At the North King County Green Business Conference, business owners and managers, entrepreneurs, students, educators, government agency representatives, citizens will learn how and why improving the environment is an opportunity to improve your business.

Speakers include Egils Milbergs, Director of the State Economic Development Commission, Shoreline Community College President Lee Lambert, Shoreline Mayor Cindy Ryu, educators who help produce qualified employees for green businesses, policy makers who support legislation that stimulate the growth of green jobs and businesses that have successfully implemented green practices. Jim DiPeso, policy director of REP, will provide the conference overview.

Going Green is all about working for a cleaner environment. But it's much more. A healthy environment and a strong economy go hand in hand. For business, "going green" is a pathway towards better products, greater customer satisfaction, and higher profits.
